Full-Impact Beauty

Whether your budget is focused on a one-room makeover or a ground-up design, Darci Reimund's full-service approach to design has earned her a reputation for one of Silicon Valley's most innovative designers.

"I'm always living at the intersection of function and beauty," says Darci. "My clients' interests are always at the forefront of what I do."

As a small firm, Darci and her team handle architecture design, interior architecture, and all the design and custom furnishings. Because she also holds a contractor's license, Darci comfortably and confidently steps into the role of creative and visionary as she helps her clients leverage every inch of space in beautiful, customized ways.

"I take a holistic perspective with every project," she says. "We might begin with one room, but the question is always going to be focused on how the client wants this project to connect to everything else that's happening around them, from their whole house interior to an exterior garden landscape. Working at places like Google and Apple have equipped me to look at client's projects with a full-impact lens. With each project being a blank canvas, it is the details that make the house a home. When I'm finished, everything I had to give is left there in that space. That's how I create beautiful spaces where people not only live life, but also where they can build lives."
